How are personal research activities reflected in teaching activities?	Improving the quality of research and education is essentially interrelated, because to realize this requires interdependence between all educational subsystems which must be balanced with input, processes, supporting facilities, human resources and other resources. However, in teaching, lecturers are the ones most responsible for the quality of education because although lecturers are not the only determining factor in educational success, teaching makes a major contribution to the quality of education and the responsibility of educators in education and research.
